

I'm typing this today to say that killing net neutrality IS NOT in the best interests of the American people. I myself am a born citizen of this country and can say that we the people will not be better off without net neutrality.

Only the major telecommunication and government corporations and organizations will be better off. They'll be better off at the cost of freedom of speech, privacy, and small business's. This will not help the sick, disabled, infirm, or terminally ill. Matter of fact for those that rely on medication from hospitals and other medical organizations delays from a " slow speed " connection could KILL THEM. That's right this could be a life or death situation brought on by an either a lack of understanding technology and or flat out greed.

If this will help innovation why are the innovation experts siding against this in mass droves ? I'm not drawing my own conclusion on this I'm legitimately. I see these same experts lining up signing petitions trying to stop this. The only reason I can come up with is that they DON'T WANT IT.

If this is supposed to encourage competition then why is major telecom companies fighting cities setting up their own internet / inter-web programs designed to combat this ? Isn't that competition ?

Why is a former telecom attorney Ajit Pai leading the charge against net neutrality and the FCC ? How is that not a conflict of interest ? How can this continue when there's even documented evidence that some of the comments might be fraud ? Wouldn't that make the vote illegal and non-valid ?

No I don't trust telecommunication companies that can't even provide adequate service to not jack up the price of service, throttle my internet connection, or favor certain connections. These are the same people that sell cable / satellite by packages and bundles. It's literally their business model. I don't need to be a business expert to know how they do business.

I also personally disagree with the conclusions that Ajit Pai has made as they're coming from a completely biased point of view not to mention the complete lack of attention that's being made over the public outcry. I expect this to be ignored. As this goes against the wishes / ideal view of the FCC. But on the unlikely chance someone reads this. SAVE NET NEUTRALITY AND FIRE AJIT PAI. This is not the will of the people.
